WA-V-007
Wilson School
Washington Co., MD

Description Summary:

The Wilson School is a one-room schoolhouse, constructed 1859-60 on the historic National Road in Washington County, Maryland. It is a simple gable-fronted building constructed of brick laid in common bond on a stone foundation. It has undergone few alterations and has been restored as a local museum.

General Description:

Constructed in 1859-60, the Wilson School is located at the end of Rufus Wilson Road near the former alignment of the National Road about four miles east of Clear Spring in Washington County, Maryland. The rectangular building stands one room wide and three bays deep, constructed of brick laid in common bond above a random rubble limestone foundation. Its simple, gable-front composition reflects a vernacular interpretation of the Greek Revival style which was commonly employed for rural school buildings in the mid-19th century. Large 9/6 sash windows define the longitudinal bays, set in openings with flat brick arches and wooden sills. The entrance is located in a small vestibule which projects from the south gable end. While the masonry of the vestibule does not appear to be keyed into that of the main block, the character of the brickwork and detailing of the two elements is very similar, indicating that not much time passed before the addition of the vestibule. The entrance comprises a single door below a three-light transom. A brick exterior chimney is located on the south gable, west of the vestibule. The north gable end is unfenestrated except for a small louvered ventilator located near the peak. The west elevation is three bays wide; the northernmost bay holds a secondary entrance, probably converted from a window opening in the early 1940s in response to safety requirements, while the remaining bays retain 9/6 sash windows in openings topped with flat brick arches. The roof is covered with ridged metal, and there is a pronounced overhang at the eaves.

The interior is finished throughout in plaster above random-width tongue-and-groove wainscoting capped with a beaded chair rail. Window architraves are trimmed with simple flat boards with a beaded edge. At the north end of the school room is a two-foot-wide platform.

The building has been restored and furnished to interpret a country school of the period. A three-panel blackboard is located at the north end, and another blackboard is located at the rear of the schoolroom, east of the entrance. A pot-bellied stove is located to the west of the entrance. Furnishings include school desks representing various periods.

The Wilson School has undergone few alterations. Some repairs and repointing have been made to the limestone foundation and common bond brick walls, especially on the north elevation, and a window on the west elevation was altered to a doorway.

Significance Summary

The Wilson School is significant under Criterion A for its association with the early development of education in Washington County. Constructed in 1859-60 by local merchant Rufus Wilson to serve his son and neighbors' children, it was incorporated into the county's public education system in the 1890s and remained in use until it closed in 1950, the last operating one-room school in Washington County. It is also significant under Criterion C as a well-preserved representative example of a type of one-room school building typical of rural Maryland in the third quarter of the 19th century.

Resource History & Historic Context

In 1859, Rufus Wilson began building the school on property owned by the family of his late wife, Elizabeth Brewer Wilson, for his only child, John Wilson, and neighborhood children. The school opened in 1860 and remained in operation until 1950, when it was closed following the recommendations of a survey team from New York City commissioned by the county Board of Education. At that time, it was the only remaining one-room schoolhouse in Washington County, and had an enrollment ranging from Kindergarten through Fourth Grade.

Before it became part of the Washington County school system, the Wilson School was operated privately at a tuition ranging from $20 to $30 per term. In 1890, John D. Brewer, who had inherited the property, formally transferred it to the Board of the County School Commissioners.

The Free School system in Washington County was established in 1864 and enacted the following year by the General Assembly of Maryland. The period 1867-76 saw the greatest expansion of school building in Washington County; during this period, schools numbered 127 in all, 45 of log construction, 40 built of brick, and only six with more than one room. The Wilson School is the only example of its type in Washington County which retains integrity.
